6.3.5 - Institutions Performance Appraisal System for teaching and non- teaching staff

Every year the IQAC directs the faculty to update their profile. The faculty are encouraged to pursue higher education and actively involve them in research activities in their relevant fields, that would buttress their teaching experience. The faculty are asked to appraise themselves in consideration of aspects such as research involvement such as attending and conducting conferences, seminars workshops etc., writing and publishing academic papers, taking initiatives in accepting responsibility for extracurricular and co-curricular activities, time management, their availability beyond class hours and their overall involvement in the activities of the institution.

As an educational institution also involves, non-teaching staff, their quality also adds to the progress of the institution. The IQAC mandates a self-appraisal for non-teaching staff too in order to keep them quality focussed. Feedback on aspects like punctuality, relationship with teaching and fellow non-teaching staff, involvement in college work and availability of the non-teaching staff for any additional work are some of the aspects on which the non-teaching staff appraise themselves.

The HOI assesses the feedbacks submitted by both teaching and non-teaching staff. In all, the practice of self-appraisal keeps both teaching and non-teaching staff aware of their responsibilities.

The practice has built leadership skills among students and the number of placements have proliferated in addition to good academic results.

VBAG (Vivekananda, Basavanna, Ambedkar, Gandhi) Virtues is another best practice in the college that is practised through the study centres related to these four personalities. The practice aims to imbibe the values, and messages of these leaders in the minds of students. By knowing great leaders' lives the students are made to inculcate values in their lives. A series of webinars 'Study A Leader To Become One (SALTBO)' lecture series were delivered by the students about these personalities. The students prepared papers on them and presented in the webinars which have been brought out as E-Magazine on the website.
